Balancing Part-Time Work with Study

Many students gain part-time employment to support their undergraduate studies. Universities recommend that students do not work more than 10-15 hours per week. However, some universities don't allow students to have a part-time job whilst studying. The websites linked below offer some guidance with regards to balancing work and study:

Apprenticeships and Degree Apprenticeships

Some students may decide they would like to go down the route of an apprenticeship or a degree apprenticeship. In this circumstance they may be paid to learn job-specific skills and work full-time hours, or learn and work alongside a degree. The links below provide information on the options available for committing to an apprenticeship, which some students may consider instead of a degree:
